The Ten Outstanding Students of the Philippines (TOSP) Foundation kicks off on Oct. 22 the 57th edition of its awards and formation program, highlighting the youth's role in nation-building amid the challenges brought about by the pandemic.

Continuing its tradition of nurturing and honing the country's next leaders, TOSP will gather 30 national finalists for a three-day virtual program which aims to strengthen their character as individuals, fortify their values as servant leaders, and reinforce their belief in themselves and their countrymen.

TOSP Foundation Inc. President Marie Concepcion-Young noted that these finalists not only lived as role models to their peers but also actualized the essence of TOSP—youth participation in nation-building.

"Each finalist has their own story on inspiring excellence, servant-leadership, and culture of concern. Young as they are, they used their skills and capacities to impact significant change in their communities in the hopes that the Philippines can move forward," Concepcion-Young said.

At the end of this year's formation program—which will be held over the course of three weekends, culminating in an awards ceremony on December 1—Concepcion-Young said it is their hope that these young leaders continue to serve their cause and their generation as "it is only in service that we find a deeper meaning to our existence."

Founded in 1961 by businessman Jose Concepcion Jr., TOSP has evolved from an awards program to a youth movement that believes in the youth's capacity and idealism, and galvanizes them to action.
